The Executive-In-Residence Program is an outreach effort of the College of Business to bring senior executives from the public and private sectors to campus to dialogue with students, faculty, and area business leaders. The format changes to accommodate busy schedules and is usually designed to showcase the particular area of expertise or specialization of the visiting executive.

The program aims to bring a minimum of one major presenter to campus each semester. Topics will vary with the interests of the presenter and will focus on a variety of issues such as current trends, the future, international business, new technology, resource utilization, and business and management theory.

Program components are established to encourage exchanges between faculty, students, and area business leaders.
